Alison Crum has been called 'the doyenne of British viol teachers', and has a worldwide reputation for her teaching skills. She has a busy schedule of teaching in the UK, Professor of Viola da gamba at Trinity College of Music London, and holding teaching posts also at West Dean College, (where she teaches apprentice viol makers, and supervises them on the practical details of setting up their instruments) and at many British universities including Birmingham and Edinburgh. She also gives private lessons and group coaching in many parts of the country including London, Oxford, Derby, Leeds and Devon. Further afield she teaches on a regular basis in Germany, Belgium and Italy, and in many parts of the USA. She has also made several visits to Australia, New Zealand, Japan, Hong Kong, and Israel. Crum is President of the Viola da Gamba Society of Great Britain, She directs many courses for viol players, including the International Viol Summer School, attracting players from all over the world, and has published a series of graded music books centred around her highly acclaimed textbook Play the Viol - now in its 5th reprint. Her second book, The Viol Rules was published in November 2009.
